Pope Francis apologizes to Canada's Indigenous Peoples

- By Vatican News staff reporter

Sorrow and pardon

On Friday, Pope Francis met with all three indigenous delegations and had this to say: “For the deplorable conduct of those members of the Catholic Church, I ask for God's forgiveness, and I want to say to you with all my heart: I am very sorry. And I join my brothers, the Canadian bishops, in asking your pardon.”

He told those present that he had listened to their stories. By doing this, the Pope said, he was able to enter into and be deeply grieved by the stories of the suffering, hardship, discrimination and various forms of abuse that some of them experienced, particularly in the residential schools.

“It is chilling to think of determined efforts to instill a sense of inferiority, to rob people of their cultural identity, to sever their roots, and to consider all the personal and social effects that this continues to entail: unresolved traumas that have become intergenerational traumas,” he said.

Indignation and shame

The Pope added that he felt shame “for the role that a number of Catholics, particularly those with educational responsibilities, have had in all these things that wounded you, in the abuses you suffered and in the lack of respect shown for your identity, your culture and even your spiritual values.”

A Canadian journey

"I think with joy, for example, of the great veneration that many of you have for Saint Anne, the grandmother of Jesus." And giving a clue to his intention to visit Canada, he said, "This year I would like to be with you on those days."

Drawing his address to a close, Pope Francis said he had been enriched by their words and their testimonies. He also said he would be happy to benefit again from meeting them when he visits their native lands, where your families live." In another clue to a possible visit, he added, "I won't come in the winter! So I will close by saying "Until we meet again" in Canada, where I will be able better to express to you my closeness."
